Subject: I (i) 選舉委員會的人數

HK has 6.5 million people. If I estimate only 1/2 of 6.5 million people are qualified to vote. Then each person in the 800 Election Committee represents 3,750 people.

My suggestion is: Each qualified voter should have one vote for selecting the Chief Executive in 2007 instead of using a Election Committee.

Thanks.

Candidate for the office of Chief Executive should not be nominated by the members of the Election Committee.

All qualified person under HK basic law should be able to become candidate for the office of Chief Executive.

Competent candidate might not be nominated by the Election Committee. Everyone who is qualified to become candidates for the office of Chief Executive should have a chance to run for the office.

All seats (60 Seats) in the Legislative Council should be voted by qualified voter.

The 28 functional constituencies which represents 30 seats do not truly reflect the society as a whole. Each person should be able to vote for the Council they think he/she is competent no matter what function they are in the society. This only create special interest group. Legislative Council should represents majority of the people in Hong Kong. Legislative Council should not represent special interest group (each functional constituency) in the society.
